"Did you know?" A series of articles dispelling common family law myths

"If we agree how to split the finances we do not need a court order"

Unless the parties enter into a court order dealing with the financial settlement and dismissing their claims, both parties are still entitled to make a claim against the other and could go back on the informal agreement previously made. Only when a court order dealing with your financial settlement and dismissing claims has been approved by a Judge are finances considered settled.
